Lawyer David Welch, of New York, aroused the Governor's sympathy in the case of Philip Derringer, a mechanic, who is serving a tweive years and six months' sentence in Sing Sing for murder of his wife. His plea was attended by one of the most dramatic incidents that ever characterized a similar event.

Lena, the nine-year-old daughter of Derringer, who was the only witness to the killing of her mother, described with thrilling simplicity the murder in the flat occupied by the Derringers in West Thirty-seventh street one night in April, 1891.

It was mainly upon the evidence of Thirty-seventh street one night in April, 1881.

It was mainly upon the evidence of the little girl, then scarcely five years old, that Derringer was convicted. She was not allowed to testify, but other witnesses presented her version as given in the presence of her father after the death of her mother.

Derringer claimed that his child did not say at any time that she saw him beat her mother, knocking her down and kicking her, as alleged, and she herself told the Governor to-day that she had never made any such statements.

Derringer and his friends alleged that his wife. Catharine, was dissipated and neglected her house and child. She was drunk on the night of her death, and he slapped her. She fell to the floor, her head striking a chair, causing a fracture of her skull from which she died.

Derringer was acquitted by the Coroner's Jury, but was convicted upon the representations of witnesses who alleged that little Lena had confirmed their charge of murder.

Lattle Lena described with circumstantial detail to-day the incidents of the killing, and Lawyer Welch presented affidavits from Coroner Levy, Police Capt. Cross, members of the jury that convicted Derringer and the District-Attorney, all favorable to Derringer.

He found his parents lying dead in the kitchen, their clothing torn and their heads gashed and crushed from blows with an axe. The murderers were evidently familiar with Webber's method of doing business. Everything was overhauled and not a cent of his money escaped them. There is no clue.

a newspaper. Assistant District-Attorney Lindsay appeared for the prosecution.

The burden of Judge Curtis's argument was to the effect that because of irregularities in the verdict of the jury, subsequently amended by the Clerk of the Court by direction of the presiding Judge, there existed a doubt as to the legality of the punishment.

We will concede that the verdict was amended as stated by Judge Curtis, said Mr. Lindsay, "and that the verdict was irregular."

Then you concede Garvey is guilty only of entering the building unlawfully? asked Judge Curtis.

"Certainly, that is all it can stand for," said Justice Patterson.

Mr. Lindsay attempted to explain, when Judge Patterson said:

"It is your contention, Mr. Lindsay, that the verdict of the jury follows the indictment, and this if Garvey was guilty of entering the building, he was also guilty of the intention to commit a crime as charged?"

"We do," answered Mr. Lindsay.

"Well, well," said Judge Curtis, with a show of great relief, "I am glad in this day of investigating committees to see that the principles of law are recognized in the courts."

Justice Patterson took the papers in the case and reserved decision.
